“How Do You Say That?” (HDYST) can be a falsely difficult question to ask. We believe that in order to live in a truly inclusive and equitable world, we need to be able to both ask and answer this question authentically. This blog is dedicated to asking those seemingly difficult questions to find simple answers.

HDYST is committed to making those who are othered in all spaces (but we focus on womxn of color in nonprofit/higher education) feel okay with being different. By asking “how do you say that?” we champion stories of resilience, refuse to accept the status quo, and build community to remind you that you are not alone.

This was built for you: HDYST is a platform to share your truth and wisdom. Our goal is to amplify voices on the margins, specifically BIPOC womxn, in hopes that our readers will critically engage with your content. Your content is yours. HDYST will serve as your publishing, promotional and distribution partner. You maintain ownership of your content and can distribute in all forms, but please link back to our website or instagram. All Authors will have their paypal/venmo account listed with their piece and readers will be encouraged to support author’s directly. No direct compensation will be provided by HDYST and there is no guarantee of revenue to the author. You may also select to send funds to a non-profit or organization of choice. Each author will provide a photograph, bio, and promote their content within their own social/personal networks.

Scope:

The limit does not exist!” We encourage creativity and while there are no strict guidelines, all stories should be founded in values of diversity, equity, and inclusion. Please have a minimum of 500-word story.

Process:

Have an article ready to go? Email it to us! If we find it does not align with HDYST’s mission, we will return it to you and will not re-distribute, share, or re-purpose your creative property. If you would like to pitch an idea, email us! Again, if there is no alignment with HDYST’s mission, we will not re-distribute, share, or re-purpose your creative property.
